ever on her marriage. Keep up his resentment, therefore, I to whom that great word 'respectable' is always given, and I scarcely dares speak to me. It is time for me to be gone; I more altered; the whole party are at war, and Mainwaring charge you. We are now in a sad state; no house was ever to her guardian, if she had the liberty of addressing him: of her temper, I should not be surprized at her appealing of all this is very provoking: Sir James is gone, Maria highly should: but I must own myself rather romantic in that rewere he but one degree less contemptibly weak I certainly than once repented that I did not marry him myself; and has an awkward look. am known to be so intimate with his wife, his slighting me be the case, for as Mr Johnson, with all his faults, is a man come to me at 10 Wigmore street; but I hope this may not If I am as little in favour with Mr Johnson as ever, you must I hope, a comfortable day with you in town within this week have therefore determined on leaving them, and shall spend most amiable action of his life was his throwing her off for but there your husband stands my friend; and the kindest, jealous, in short, and so enraged against me, that, in the fury incensed, and Mrs Mainwaring insupportably jealous; so spect, and that riches only will not satisfy me. The event better to lay aside the scheme for the present. I have more to set herself so violently against the match that I thought it Frederica, who was born to be the torment of my life, chose Sir James did make proposals to me for Frederica; but I take London in my way to that insupportable spot, a country village; for I am really going to Churchhill. Forgive me, my dear friend, it is my last resource. Were there another place in England open to me I would prefer it. Charles Vernon is my aversion; and I am afraid of his wife. At Churchhill, however, I must remain till I have something better in view. My young Lady accompanies me to town, where I shall deposit her under the care of Miss Summers, in Wigmore street, till she becomes a little more reasonable. She will made good connections there, as the girls are all of the best families. The price is immense, and much beyond what I can ever attempt to pay.

Adieu, I will send you a line as soon as I arrive in town.

Yours ever,

S. Vernon

My dear Mother, appeared so exactly the place for her in every respect, as well nor can I now account for her ladyship's conduct; Langford its length. I was by no means prepared for such an event, merely an affair of convenience, it is impossible to conjecture us almost immediately; and as such a visit is in all probability to her brother-in-law, has declared her intention of visiting is not likely to make us any amends. Lady Susan, in a letter and we are prevented that happiness by a circumstance which to keep our promise of spending our Christmas with you; obliged to receive her. too kind to her when he was in Staffordshire; her behaviour continues so well; and am, with best love, &c., his joining our party soon. I am glad to hear that my father to see the captivating Lady Susan, and we shall depend on sirable companion here. Reginald has long wished, I know to any of mine. Miss Vernon is to be placed at a school in sire of being acquainted with me, and makes very gracious something more substantial. She expresses a most eager deguard myself against their influence, if not accompanied by any share of my regard; and I shall certainly endeavour to may guess, therefore, my dear madam, with what feelings as for myself, I am still unconvinced, and plausibly as her general resolutions of prudence, were sufficient to soften everyone, her display of grief, and professions of regret, and received so wretched an education, could not be a very debe separated from her mother, and a girl of sixteen who has for her sake and my own. It must be to her advantage to London before her mother comes to us which I am glad of not with unkindness, to her own child, should be attached to suppose a woman who has behaved with inattention, if mention of my children but I am not quite weak enough those attractive powers for which she is celebrated to gain I look forward to her arrival. Langford, De

My dear Brother,

I can no longer refuse myself the pleasure of profiting by your kind invitation when we last parted of spending some weeks with you at Churchhill, and, therefore, if quite convenient to you and Mrs Vernon to receive me at present, I shall hope within a few days to be introduced to a sister whom I have so long desired to be acquainted with. My kind friends here are most affectionately urgent with me to prolong my stay, but their hospitable and cheerful dispositions lead them too much into society for my present situation and state of mind; and I impatiently look forward to the hour when I shall be admitted into your delightful retirement.

I long to be made known to your dear little children, in whose hearts I shall be very eager to secure an interest. I shall soon have need for all my fortitude, as I am on the point of separation from my own daughter. The long illness of her dear father prevented my paying her that attention which duty and affection equally dictated, and I have too much reason to fear that the governess to whose care I consigned her was unequal to the charge. I have therefore resolved on placing her at one of the best private schools in town, where I shall have an opportunity of leaving her myself in

Chapter 4

Mr De Courcy to Mrs Vernon

My dear Sister,

Parklands.

I congratulate you and Mr Vernon on being about to receive into your family the most accomplished coquette in England. As a very distinguished flirt I have always been taught to consider her, but it has lately fallen in my way to hear some particulars of her conduct at Langford: which prove that she does not confine herself to that sort of honest flirtation which satisfies most people, but aspires to the more delicious gratification of making a whole family miserable. By her behaviour to Mr Mainwaring she gave jealousy and wretchedness to his wife, and by her attentions to a young man previously attached to Mr Mainwaring's sister deprived an amiable girl of her lover.

I learnt all this from Mr Smith, now in this neighbourhood (I have dined with him, at Hurst and Wilford), who is just come from Langford where he was a fortnight with her ladyship, and who is therefore well qualified to make the communication.

What a woman she must be! I long to see her, and shall certainly accept your kind invitation, that I may form some idea of those bewitching powers which can do so much—engaging at the same time, and in the same house, the affections of two men, who were neither of them at liberty to bestow them—and all this without the charm of youth! I am glad to find Miss Vernon does not accompany her mother to Churchhill, as she has not even manners to recommend her; and, according to Mr Smith's account, is equally dull and proud. Where pride and stupidity unite there can be no dissimulation worthy notice, and Miss Vernon shall be consigned to unrelenting contempt; but by all that I can gather Lady Susan possesses a degree of captivating deceit which it must be pleasing to witness and detect. I shall be with you very soon, and am ever,

Lady Susan

Your affectionate brother,

R. DE COURCY.

Chapter 5

Lady Susan Vernon to Mrs Johnson

Churchbill.

six years ago, and which never succeeded at last. cordiality is not very surprizing, and yet it shows an illiberal to prevent my brother-in-law's marrying her, this want of possible on the occasion, but all in vain. She does not like wanted her to be delighted at seeing me. I was as amiable as can persuade me of her being prepossessed in my favour. I and rejoice to be assured that Mr Johnson suspected nothing and vindictive spirit to resent a project which influenced me me. To be sure, when we consider that I did take some pains of a woman of fashion, but her manners are not such as his lady. She is perfectly well-bred, indeed, and has the air I confess myself not equally satisfied with the behaviour of reason to complain of my reception from Mr Vernon; but he must be tricked. I arrived here in safety, and have no better to deceive him entirely, and since he will be stubborn of your engagement the evening before. It is undoubtedly I received your note, my dear Alicia, just before I left town

I am sometimes disposed to repent that I did not let Charles buy Vernon Castle, when we were obliged to sell it; but it was a trying circumstance, especially as the sale took place exactly at the time of his marriage; and everybody ought to respect the delicacy of those feelings which could not endure that my husband's dignity should be lessened easily imposed upon! The house is a good one, the furniture very useful to me. I really have a regard for him, he is so given his wife an unfavourable impression, but where there chasing Vernon? My having prevented it may perhaps have and what benefit could have accrued to me from his purtor his dear uncle's sake. ular, a young Frederic, whom I take on my lap and sigh over to attach myself with the greatest sensibility to one in particthe children; I know all their names already, and am going as possible. I mean to win my sister-in-law's heart through never go to London but on business. We shall be as stupid not know what to do with it, keep very little company, and name in a banking-house he rolls in money; but they do Charles is very rich I am sure; when a man has once got his fashionable, and everything announces plenty and elegance. and as to money matters it has not withheld him from being is a disposition to dislike, a motive will never be wanting; the event has justified me. Here are children in abundance, Charles was on the point of marrying Miss De Courcy, and from persuading my husband to dispose of it elsewhere; but with Charles and kept him single, I should have been very fai the necessity of our leaving the castle, could we have lived estate. Could matters have been so arranged as to prevent by his younger brother's having possession of the family

Poor Mainwaring! I need not tell you how much I Miss him. how perpetually he is in my thoughts. I found a dismal letter from him on my arrival here, full of complaints of his wife and sister, and lamentations on the cruelty of his fate. I passed off the letter as his wife's, to the Vernons, and when I write to him it must be under cover to you.

Ever yours

S. Vernon.
